neighbor when you possess & distribute is an example of human righteousness.
not dividing righteousness in the first place is wrong. The first time you should not do to your neighbor as you would not want to be done to you.

This demonstrates the principle that righteousness is not just a matter of generosity, but also a matter of justice. It is not enough to simply give to others, but we must also ensure that justice is done.

In the context of Romans 1:19-22, James and Gentiles are commended for their righteousness. However, this righteousness must be measured against the standard of Christ's own righteousness. As Christians, we must strive to live in a way that reflects the love and justice of God, even as we distribute resources to others.
Herausgegeben von Lotar Lies

Innsbruck, 2.-6. September 1985
der 4. Internationalen Österreichkongresses
Die Referate

Innsbrucker Theologische Studien

Quarta

Origienia